Moldovan PM has talks with North Carolina Secretary of State

Expanding economic cooperation, attracting American investments and strengthening the partnership between Moldova and the state of North Carolina have been the main topics discussed by Prime Minister Vasile Tofan and North Carolina Secretary of State Elaine Marshall.

The officials expressed openness to continuing cooperation and capitalizing on economic opportunities, so that collaboration between Moldova and North Carolina can generate new investments and joint projects.

In the context, the PM spoke about the government’s priorities for improving the business environment, reducing bureaucracy and facilitating investments. The prime minister emphasized that Moldova aims to become one of the most business-friendly countries in Europe for entrepreneurs, by creating a flexible business environment and favorable conditions for companies seeking access to the European Union market.

“Entrepreneurs want to talk to people who speak the same language and understand their challenges. We want to build a state that is a partner to investors, offering them solutions and helping them develop their businesses. Moldova must be a country where investing is simple and attractive,” said Prime Minister Vasile Tofan.

The sides highlighted investment opportunities in the energy, agriculture and industrial sectors, as well as the positioning of Moldova as a regional platform for companies interested in participating in Ukraine’s reconstruction. The organization of visits by business delegations from North Carolina and the establishment of direct contacts with potential partners from Moldova were also encouraged.
